The ocean teaches when it embraces

And when it's rough.

By the sea,

The school of existence is the Mermaid.

The wind blows steadily

And the coolness of the water scares no one.

Any river makes sense.

An eye for an eye.

And obviously a tooth for a tooth.

Foot at the door.

The goal is to find proof.

To arrest

Or to kill.

The thinking of whoever hopes to eliminate you.

Bravery.

Your life has no value.

Empty house

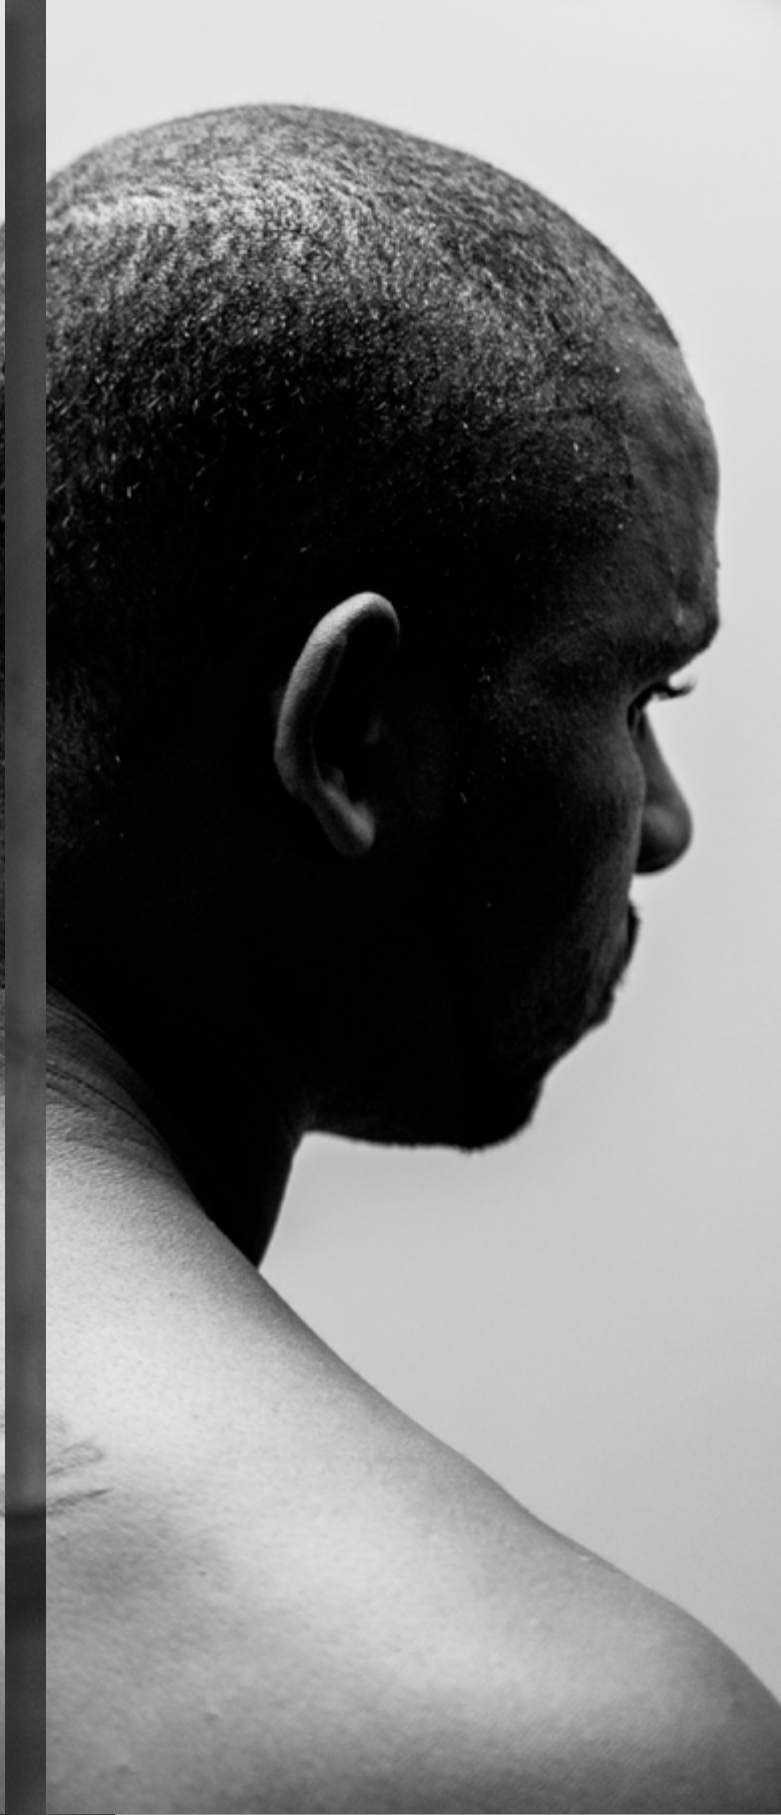

Turned inside out.

A note.

Upon sensing the movement of a kite in the sky,
I consider the nimbleness of the stars
Of soccer...
When they score
And I revive my dreams
Of one day hang-gliding from Pedra da Gávea,
Giving my mother a nice house,
Getting married,
Having five kids,
Seeing them grow up healthy
And teaching them to fly a kite

A pure heart,
tried and true.

Love, I told you it was stupid.

A gang of seven,

And women under high pressure.

Crime faction, death sentence.

A steady path toward danger.

I still cry.

Your daughter cries.

Your mom cries even more.

The risk was as certain

As the resistance and the courage.

The people of a country screwed watching chapters of their History
on television

Who played no role

Who were silent or applauded the coup

Also love seeing a soccer game.

I like the joy of watching, mouth watering,
the Brazilian championship.

Soccer means everything to me.

I've seen it all.

Time flew by.

I am Pierrot.

My wife has died,

My daughter is married,

My grandson was born.

I am old but happy.

I'm dating a girl of 30.

Her name is Sonia.

She drinks beer.

She roots for Vasco.

I killed a scumbag policeman

With my revolver

Yesterday.

I've seen enough

That I can die.

The girl walking

Among men

Resists their desire,

Their arms reaching to embrace.

The temporary smell of freedom at a festival.

Strange body.

Hostile system.

They didn't ask me my name.

If I've had my own house.

If I've loved once or twice.

How I feel.

I appear invisible,

I know.

But true misery belongs to whoever ignores me.

What matters is now.

Boundless joy!

Even if death by confrontation

Is the news tomorrow.

All are equal.

Playing out on the street never stops being fun.

Not even when life ends.

Because a smile is a flower that gets planted in your mind.

One thing's for sure,
the whole favela knows:
Victories at play become legend.

PAG. 4–5
Passistas samba dancers perform during the final rehearsal of Porto da Pedra samba school before their parade in the Sambódromo. February 2007.

PAG. 6–7
Children waiting in line to receive free popcorn in the Dendê favela after the evangelical mass in northern Rio de Janeiro. In this favela the state is nonexistent, leaving the ground to drug gangs, who control the territory and the residents by paying for their popcorn, medicine, cooking gas or other basic needs. July 2008.

PAG. 8–9
Policemen from DRAE (Civilian Police Division Against Weapons and Explosives in Portuguese) carry the body of a young man, while two children coming back from school look at the scene. This is a case of “resistance to authority.” After allegedly being told to stop by the police, the suspect “resisted” and was shot and taken to the hospital. In 2009 alone, the police officially killed 1,049 people with this practice. November 2009.

PAG. 11
A girl looks over her shoulder while she walks in the middle of the street during a police raid in which 400 policemen surrounded Complexo do Alemão, where an estimated 70,000 people live. March 2007.

PAG. 12–13
Soldiers from the BOPE (Special Operations Unit from the Military Police) enter their armored car known as “Caveirão” during a police operation against drug traffickers of the Red Command gang in Complexo do Alemão favela complex. March 2007.

PAG. 14–15
A view of what is left of Vila Autódromo, a small favela in Jacarepaguá, in western Rio de Janeiro, demolished because of the construction of the Olympic Village. The summer Olympics took place here, over seventeen days, at a cost of 13 billion USD. February 2016.

PAG. 16–17
Young men, members of a drug trafficking gang known as “Third Command,” patrol the streets of Praia da Rosa favela on Governor’s Island, near the international airport. July 2008.

PAG. 18–19

PAG. 30–31
A man works at a building construction site at the top of Vidigal favela. Public policies have made Vidigal a “pacified” favela. Due to its strategic location in southern Rio de Janeiro, between Leblon and São Conrado this favela has experienced gentrification, with luxury hotels and restaurants being built, forcing older residents to sell their houses because they can no longer afford the rising cost of basic consumer goods. June 2014.

PAG. 32–33
Two suspected members of the drug trafficking gang “Terceiro Comando” (the boy in the center of the image is fifteen years old) are arrested during a police operation in the Acari favela in northern Rio de Janeiro. February 2008.

PAG. 74–75
A young man rides a horse inside the Morro da Mineira in northern Rio de Janeiro while the city’s financial district can be seen in the background. July 2011.

PAG. 76–77
Firemen retrieve the body of a woman who was murdered in Morro da Mineira in northern Rio de Janeiro. Despite being considered a “pacified” favela with the presence of the military police, murders still occur on a regular basis. July 2011.

PAG. 78–79
A policeman from DRAE photographs the mug shots of João Paulo da Costa, detained as a suspected drug dealer. He will await trial in detention. February 2008.

PAG. 80–81
Young boys play with kites in the Providência favela. During the FIFA World Cup in Brazil, the schools of Rio de Janeiro remained closed, leaving the youngsters with nothing to do for a whole month. June 2014.

PAG. 82–83
Women scavengers go through the trash left behind by carnival partygoers trying to find materials they can resell. Every year during carnival, about fourty tons of trash are produced every night in the Sambódromo, made up mostly of carnival costumes bought by partygoers, who parade for about one hour with a samba school in the Sambódromo and then leave it as trash. February 2016.

PAG. 84–85
A view towards the Alemão favela, one of several favelas inside the Alemão complex. While officially 70,000 people live, unofficial numbers suggest that up to 200,000 people actually live in the complex. In Rio de Janeiro alone, an estimated 1.5 to 3 million people live in the the so-called favelas, the slums that have been illegally settled in the city due to the lack of affordable housing. Most people in the favelas live with minimal or no public services, and most of these areas are under the de-facto control of drug gangs or paramilitary forces. May 2009.

PAG. 86–87
Young people who belong to the “Third Command” gang pose for a group portrait inside the Parque Royal favela on Governor’s Island in northern Rio de Janeiro. The man in the middle in a white coat is “Vesguinho,” the leader of the group. He was later killed by the military police in June 2009. July 2008.
